INTRODUCTION

'I should have been painting for this exhibition with the sun on my back for several months in Collioure, in the south west of France, however the global pandemic soon put paid to that. The subject matter switched from France to the confines of my garden and my studio floor which was the backdrop for a series of large still lives.

Whatever the subject matter or location, the exhibition would still have been titled 'A Broad Brush' as my aim with this show was to make my paintings looser, bolder, simpler and more spontaneous.

To help me achieve this I decided to simplify the process and paint the entire show with a single brush, in this case a number 12 hog hair brush (or to be more precise a handful of number 12 brushes), which for the uninitiated measures just over 2.5 centimetres in width. In effect 90% of the paintings in the exhibition were produced this way. Despite successfully most of my time fighting the urge to reach for a smaller brush, this proved too big a temptation and I did relent with some of the smaller works.

It is something which I would like to develop with my practice in the future perhaps with even larger brushes next time.....the painting adventure continues.'
